Dear my favorite person ever,

Exciting times here at the calendar factory!

OK, so it's less of a factory and more like the spare room in my house in East Austin. But I don't think there's really any standard definition of factory, so I think calling it a factory is OK.

You are no doubt buried in "Best Halloween Costume" trophies and prize money right now, so congratulations on your successful domination of yet another holiday. I can't wait to see what you do for Thanksgiving.

I realize you are knowledgeable on all topics. However, I wanted to share a not-well-known fact you already know, so maybe you could tell all the lesser-thans so that it doesn't look like the calendar factory has made a mistake.

Día de los Muertos is a multi-día Mexican celebration, not just one día. For real. At least according to Wikipedia. In Wikipedia-land the duration is "3 days." Mexico knows how to party.

I can't make this stuff up.

Mainly because I'm too busy making up other stuff. But yes, the Día is tres días.

The editorial staff and I had to do some soul searching (pun intended) and ultimately decided to mark the most muerto día as the holiday, rather than mark all 3 días and look like fools to the unknowing.

And so that is why on your calendar you will see that Día de los Muertos is November 2. Unless I'm making that up.

Which I'm not because I'm just doing what Wikipedia says.

And how's this for a non sequitur?

We have a new calendar city this year. What is it?

YES I'M STILL PLUGGING THE COMMERCIAL OVER A YEAR LATER!

We've (still) got a video on the website of me showing people how a calendar works. I paid a lot for this, so expect to see it for eternity! Check it on out the sample page. (To make it bigger, click on the little YouTube icon in the bottom right.)

Thanks to Moth to Flame, who I worked with on this project.
